HOZEKIAH FOUND THIS RACE WITH MOSES AND PETER TO BE GROSSLY UNFAIR

Thought of the Week

I know that many of you were not here last Sunday, and it's truly a shame that you missed the best sermon ever given. The earth shook, doves flew down from the heavens, and 14 people were baptized. Since you were not here to witness such an incredible event, I'll give you a small piece of what was discussed. It was meaningful to me, and I think it will be for you too.

Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood was a children's TV show that aired from 1968-2003 (that's a long time), and if you are unfamiliar with it, go look it up; you're missing out. When the show began, it received good reviews, but it was never the most popular thing to watch. Kids would much rather watch Adam West's Batman, Scooby-Doo, or Flash Gordon than watch Mr. Rogers play with puppets. But over the years, Mr. Rogers became more and more popular as people began to see how important his lessons were. Today, he is a nation-wide icon.

Throughout the decades in which the show aired, Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood never changed its main theme: anything mentionable is manageable. If you can talk about it, you can handle it, no matter what is going on. Fred Rogers was also an ordained minister, and while his show was not a "Christian" tv show, everything he did on and off camera was surrounded by the idea of prayer. Lifting problems up to God was at the core of Mr. Rogers' life.

In 2019, there was a movie made about Mr. Rogers (which I highly recommend), and it shows how Mr. Rogers cared about people more than anything else in the world. There is one particular scene that I like where it shows Mr. Rogers (played by Tom Hanks) kneeling by his bedside with a book of names. Everyday, Mr. Rogers would write down the names of people he met who were struggling, and he would pray for them, name by name, before bed.

Prayer is often something we think of as our way of talking about our problems with God, and while this is true, it is also our way of lifting the problems of others to God. Praying for our own struggles, but also others DAILY strengthens us and each other.
